

Modern Slavery Benchmark

Enhance your modern slavery response with guidance from leading practice

The KPMG Modern Slavery Benchmark allows you to easily assess your progress in addressing modern slavery.

Australia's modern slavery legislation requires entities to make a public statement on how they identify and manage modern slavery risks in their operations and supply chain. Boards are responsible for the statements, which will be published on a central government register.

Self-assess your current state in preparation for reporting for the first time under the Australian legislation.

The KPMG Modern Slavery Benchmark guides you through a self-assessment of the maturity of your entity's modern slavery risk management for your operations and supply chain. We equip you with practical recommendations to take effective action. You will gain industry insights and understand your gaps against leading practice.

How it works

1

Self-Assessment

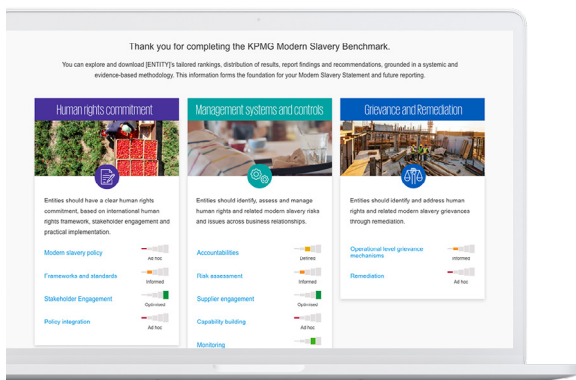

- Participate in a guided questionnaire to self-assess the maturity of your current policies, management systems and controls, and mechanisms to respond to modern slavery allegations
- Select your preferred number of respondents to complete the questionnaire, so that you can understand the maturity across the business including diverse functions and your wholly owned subsidiaries
- Receive technical support during the self-assessment

2

Benchmark

- The digital tool aggregates and analyses your inputs against the established leading practice criteria built into the Benchmark
- The Benchmark generates findings, comparable indicative maturity rankings and recommendations for your self-assessed level of maturity

3

Report and Next Steps

- Receive your KPMG Modern Slavery Benchmark Report accessible online and in a convenient download
- Access interactive benchmarking to compare responses according to subsidiary, or track your progress over each year
- Engage KPMG Banarra, our human rights and social impact specialists, to discuss your recommendations
